To end the cycle of family homelessness.

family resource exchange

Partnering with Starbucks, United Way of King County, and Mary's Place, Wellspring took part in four Family Resource Exchanges and a Community Resource Exchange, where families at risk of experiencing homelessness received on-the-spot housing resources, and access to our wider programs, including our mobile Baby Boutique offering free clothing, hygiene kits, diapers, and wipes.

home base homelessness prevention

Wellspring partnered with United Way of King County, and the King County Bar Association to prevent families from being evicted from their homes. The Home Base program put a staff member directly in the King County courthouse to work with families during their eviction process. This helped families pay their rent and legal fees built up during eviction, preventing homelessness.

FRED AND PAT

When it comes to charity, we believe in what we call 'declaring our major.' Instead of bouncing around like college students who take all kinds of courses with no end result in mind, we decided to major in Wellspring.

Homelessness frustrates both of us. Fred had a very poor and nomadic childhood, so helping those who are struggling against the same issues is important to him.

Neither of us are smart enough to figure out how one might fix the larger issue of homelessness, but we can support Wellspring's work in this area through small, meaningful, well-considered steps.

We've had Wellspring in our will for as long as we've had one. I would encourage others to get their estate plans in order and include Wellspring. It's a rush for your charitable endorphins when you remember that you've done it.

We are not billionaires and cannot meaningfully support 10 or 20 organizations. But we can be meaningful to one. That's why we decided to major in Wellspring.
